Semicolons (;) are strong punctuation marks, stronger than commas but not quite like periods. They are easy to use because they have only three uses.

♦ Between two short sentences

In order to use a semicolon, the sentences must not only be short but also have an obvious connection in meaning.

Examples:

Anna loves figure skating; she hates hockey.
He loves her; she loves him.
Frank burnt himself; he still has the scar.

♦ Between two complete thoughts before a transition word or phrase

Examples:

*Bring your I.D. card; otherwise, you won’t be allowed in.

She does a lot of travelling between semesters; for example, on the last semester break, she went to Mexico.

Subordinators (e.g. because, when) and coordinators (e.g. but, so) cannot be used with a semi-colon. See “Connectors: Usage and Meaning”.

♦ Between items in a list

Usually commas are used to separate items in a list. However, sometimes semicolons are needed in a list when commas have already been used within the individual items within the list; in those cases, semicolons are used to separate the listed items.

Example:

I am struggling to decide what university to attend: U.B.C., which has a big beautiful campus; S.F.U., which is close to my home; or U.C.F.V., which is smaller and more personal.
Exercise 1: Using Semicolons in Sentences

Add semicolons and commas where necessary.

1. When she comes to Vancouver, he is going to take his sister to see a lot of Vancouver’s attractions: Granville Island with its exciting market Grouse Mountain with its incredible view of the city Stanley Park with its beautiful sea wall and Queen Elizabeth Park with its lovely sunken garden.
2. She works downtown; he works in Surrey.
3. Smoking can kill you; nevertheless millions of people still smoke.
4. He really wants to improve his writing; but he finds he never has the time.
5. Some people prefer multiple choice exams; however others prefer essay exams.
6. When I called the restaurant, I learned that it had closed down; consequently we had to go somewhere else.
7. The pizza had her favorite toppings: ham pineapple and tomato.
8. The bald eagle is a beautiful bird; it is found in greatest numbers off the BC coast.
9. The circus had some amazing characters: Tina the tight-rope walker, Fantastic Frank the dog trainer and Leaping Leonard the lion tamer.
10. Norman Bethune is not well known in Canada; surprisingly he is famous in China.
11. She reported the accident to the police; and then she phoned her mother.
12. Beach volleyball is increasing in popularity; you can see lots of people playing it every sunny day at Kitsilano Beach.
For more practice, see:

Learning Centre Handouts

- GR6.30 Connectors: Usage and Meaning
- GR7.20 Commas – With Exercises

Exercise 1: Using Semicolons in Sentences

Add semicolons and commas where necessary.

1. When she comes to Vancouver, he is going to take his sister to see a lot of Vancouver’s attractions: Granville Island, with its exciting market; Grouse Mountain, with its incredible view of the city; Stanley Park, with its beautiful sea wall; and Queen Elizabeth Park, with its lovely sunken garden.

2. She works downtown; he works in Surrey.

3. Smoking can kill you; nevertheless, millions of people still smoke.

4. He really wants to improve his writing, but he finds he never has the time.

5. Some people prefer multiple choice exams; however, others prefer essay exams.

6. When I called the restaurant, I learned that it had closed down; consequently, we had to go somewhere else.

7. The pizza had her favorite toppings: ham, pineapple, and tomato.

8. The bald eagle is a beautiful bird; it is found in greatest numbers off the BC coast.

9. The circus had some amazing characters: Tina, the tightrope walker; Fantastic Frank, the dog trainer; and Leaping Leonard, the lion tamer.

10. Norman Bethune is not well known in Canada; surprisingly, he is famous in China.

11. She reported the accident to the police, and then she phoned her mother.

12. Beach volleyball is increasing in popularity; you can see lots of people playing it every sunny day at Kitsilano Beach.