- Be well prepared for further study in more advanced work in Canadian politics.

N: Course Content:

Major Themes:

1. Development of the Canadian Nation and State

A historical approach provides a perspective through which students may view Canada's political development. The course examines pre-confederation issues, territorial expansion, population growth, immigration, problems of nation building, identity and the development of the Canadian state.

2. Political Culture and Political Socialization

The concepts of political culture and political socialization will be defined, and provide a means of examining Canadians and their political system. Significant political cleavages will be examined as well as the concept of multiculturalism, and the emergence of aboriginal groups, "First Nations". The roles of class, gender, and the role of the media, and government information services will be examined.

3. Political Behaviour

Students will examine Canadian political behaviour through the study of the development of the political system, the role of political parties, and the electoral system and election processes. The role of interest groups, political lobbyists, "think tanks" will be reviewed in the context of the development of public policy.

O: Methods of Instruction

This course will be based on the use of formal lectures, structured group work by students, seminars and in class discussion of assigned research topics related to course objectives.

P: Textbooks and Materials to be Purchased by Students

A text and readings will be chosen based on individual instructor's preferences in consultation and with the approval of the department.
